From Climate Commitments to Infrastructure Delivery: Building the Implementation Chain

The Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB) proposes an action-oriented discussion on how policy and institutional reform, project preparation, and financing can be better sequenced and connected to create an integrated implementation pathway. The session will also explore where and how multilateral development banks (MDBs) can provide targeted technical assistance and financing along this pathway.

For AIIB, this means connecting upstream policy and technical support, with project preparation and downstream public and private financing to support a coherent project implementation process. Drawing on AIIB's investment experience, the session will examine where and why the implementation chain breaks, how a more systematic and coordinated approach can address these gaps, and how AIIB's support can help translate policy commitments into a sustained pipeline of investment-ready, climate-resilient infrastructure projects.

The session seeks to broaden the climate finance conversation from the scale of financing required to the implementation architecture needed to translate climate priorities and available capital into investable infrastructure projects.
